UNIONS AND TRADE EDUCATION. Latest Venture of Printers' Organization.

700 Students in a Year.

During the past two or three years the American public has been treated to much comment and suggestion on the matter of trade education. In the indus-trial centers there are local societies actively promoting this object, while the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education is designed to advance the interests of the new idea in

Meantime America's oldest and most progressive labor organization-the International Typographical union—has of the fifth day of the trial before Jus-formulated and launched a system of the Garretson in the supreme court cohnical education that furnishes disstruction is imparted along the lines of exhibit.

Investor's Manual of ever 200 pages—the for the benefit of the working and eolor harmonic complete railroad and industrial pocket manual ever issued, showing dividends on the principles of design and color harmony are taught scientifically, the students on over 100 other stocks.

A copy will be mailed free to those who place their orders through this office; to otherwise each.

Heretofore education in type or property instructors. pography has been by the empirical method, but the L.T. U. course aims at showing the "how" and "way" of good typography in a scientific magner. The student first masters the underlying principles and then solves the trade

> The course is sold for $20, which does not cover the cost of outfit, tuition, postage, etc. As a purely commercial venture, it would cost at least $60, but the International union in order to stimulate and encourage the study of their art by printers, defrays all advertising and other promotional expenses out of its funds, and in addition gives a rebate or prize of $5 to each student who finlahes the lessons with ordinary diligence and intelligence. Many local unions supplement this by offering additional prizes to their members and apprentices working in union offices. It is estimated that the total union expenditure on account of the educational scheme is about $8, of the educational scheme is between 88,

Week- 000 and $10,000 a year. The I. T. U. commission on supplemental trade education, which has this work in charge, promulgated its first adver-tisement asking for students last March general financial situation mailed and in a year has secured an enrollment of more than seven hundred. These include expert printers as old as sixty, and youthe of seventeen and eighteen. The experienced compositors say they find much in the course that is valuable, the first graduate being one of the highest salaried men working at the trade.

There have been achools of typography in continental Europe and Great Britain for many years, the idea being given its great stimulus in the latter country by the many-sided William Morris, who did so much to improve the appearance of the printed page, but British employing printers who have examined the I. T. U. ourse methods of instruction, as well as the secretary of the British Typographical union (for many years a director of Manchester's famous Municipal Technical school), agree that in teaching principles the International Typographical union has started a revolution in trade education. These comments have had their effect on across-sease craftsmen. While foreign students pay considerably more than Americans and Canadians, there are several British, Australian and South African printers taking the course. One mail recently brought an application from Canada's most northerly province and another from Bioem-fontein, South Africa. NEW YORK, ONTARIO & WESTERN

The course is open to those working at the printing trade, and the officers and interested members of the Typographical union are sure that it is but a beginning of what is to become a prominent feature of union work. Already the question has been advanced of making the study of the course a prerequisite for an apprentice's admission to membership in the union. The laws will not be changed hastily, but there is no doubt that now an opportunity to learn is open to them -the union will in the near future pay more attention to the technical qualifications of youthful applicants for admis-
